Wrestling With Ethical Dilemmas: We Have Met the Enemy...

Do you ever feel like your to-do list is unbelievably longer than the amount of time that you have available to tackle it? Are there days when the demands of your practice seem to run headlong into personal commitments that you once promised yourself (or someone else) you'd "make time" for? Or are you perhaps so busy that you don't even have time to stop and even ask questions like this, because the next fire is already ablaze and demanding your attention before you can pause and take a breath? Most importantly, are you aware that the constant stress of over-commitment can have a significant influence on your ability to be effective for your clients, and to maintain your ethical commitments while doing so?

If any of these questions resonate with you, then come join us for an engaging segment of this CLE program from Chris Osborn of ReelTime CLE. This program features the unique, highly interactive ReelTime CLE format, this time built around the critically acclaimed 2011 film Win Win, starring Paul Giamatti as Mike Flaherty, a middle-aged attorney trying to juggle the demands of a struggling law practice, his young family, and the hapless high school wrestling team that he coaches. We'll explore how Mike's efforts to navigate the many challenges he faces on all three fronts, while often well-intentioned, ultimately lead him to an ethical compromise that could have devastating consequences for his practice, his client, and the people he loves most. The mix of guided discussions and instructional time is led by Chris Osborn, JD, an Assistant Professor at the Charlotte School of Law. ReelTime CLE has presented its seminars in New Mexico, Georgia, New York, North Carolina, Oregon, South Carolina, and Virginia.
